OVERVIEW:
This class aims to provide an introduction to Marxist theory, with an emphasis on its underlying philosophical assumptions and arguments. Over the course of the semester we will try develop a picture of how different strands of Marx’s work weave together; how his philosophical anthropology relates to his theory of history, how his theory of value is connected to his theory of exploitation, how his conception of class is related to his theory of explanation, etc. At the same time, we will aim to get clearer on his background methodological commitments and the role these play in supporting his theory as a whole.

The class divides into three mains sections: In Section I, focusing on work of the early Marx, we will start by i) introducing some basic technical notions of Marxist theory, and ii) discussing elements of Marx’s over-arching methodology; in Section II, we will look in detail at Marx’s analysis of capital, primarily in the form of extracts from his eponymous work; finally, in Section III, we will investigate the way in which issues which occupied a background position in Sections I-II have been developed by 20th and 21st century theorists. The syllabus for this section is open-ended: it comprises of around half a dozen topics, from which you, as students enrolled in the class, will collectively choose 3-4 in which you are most interested.

ASSESSMENT:
The final class grade will break down into four components:

- Participation: 10%
- Weekly comprehension assignments: 20%
- Mid-Term Exam: 30%
- Final Exam: 40%

ATTENDANCE:
Attendance at classes twice a week is mandatory (and is, obviously, a necessary condition for the satisfying the participation component of your grade). If for any reason you will not be able to attend class, please send me an email as early as you can.

COURSE TEXTBOOK:
The majority of the readings will be drawn from The Marx-Engels Reader: 2nd Ed., edited by Robert C. Tucker. Other readings will be made available through sakai. It is also worth noting that a large amount of work by Marxist (and Marxist related) theorists can be found on the extensive marxists.org archive, if you are interested in additional reading. Some materials in the syllabus are drawn from non-academic sources, such as news publications, short films, etc. Unless noted otherwise, these are also compulsory ‘reading’.
